Aims and Scope

This journal of the Royal Institute of Public Administration reports, reviews and assesses experiments and experience in the practice of public administration where this is directed to development in third world countries. Public Administration and Development continues the work of the Journal of Administration Overseas, and sustains the distinctive contribution of its predecessor with its emphasis on the consideration of administrative practice at the local, regional and national levels. It will give special attention to features of public administration and development which have an interest and importance beyond a particular government and state. Regular book review articles will add to the appeal of the journal for students and practitioners of public administration, and those with related interests in social and development studies.
